GREAT DINING EXPERIENCES by Lois Levine

Meating Place

A 1920s speakeasy-turned-steak-house, veteran Theater District venue Gallaghers looks like just the sort of club you'd love to be a member of. Behind the vintage horseshoe-shaped bar, bartenders mix a range of cocktails (try the old-fashioned, made with both bourbon and rye). Guests can dine there, or opt for a table in the gentrified dining room, amid wood-paneled walls, gleaming copper chandeliers and red banquettes. The bill of fare boasts traditional cow-palace favorites—from a hickory log-grilled, perfectly charred porterhouse to roast prime rib, aged in the glass-walled meat locker in front—along with fresh fish and some classics-for-the-future, like a spicy tuna poke appetizer and a pistachio soufflé for dessert. Two other must-haves: the creamed spinach (from owner Dean Poll's personal recipe) and the housemade potato chips. | Gallaghers, 228 W. 52nd St., 212.586.5000
